

School for Poetic Computation □ A Dossier

A Dossier

@jeffrey · Aesthetic.Computer · ORCID 0009-0007-4460-4913

working draft — not for citation

March 2026 · 8fe6526fd

Index

1. The Posture	4
2. Structure	6
3. The Organization, 2013–2026	8
3.1 Founding semester (2013)	8
3.2 Orbital years (2014–2017)	8
3.3 Westbeth and the expansion (2018– 2019)	10
3.4 COVID rupture and re-organization (2020)	11
3.5 Post-Lieberman, post-Westbeth (2021– 2026)	12
4. People	14
5. Programs	15
6. Money	17

7. Footprint	19
7.1 Author intersection	20
8. Reading List	21
8.1 Primary sources (must-read).	21
8.2 Secondary	21
9. What this dossier is not.	23

1. The Posture

The school's founding self-description was published as a letter, not a mission statement. In January 2014, after the close of the first 10-week semester, administrator Casey Gollan wrote to the fifteen students: "Today I'm happy to present you all with a report on money... we always intended to give back any money that we didn't spend to you, so today we'd like to offer each of you $700." (\) The school's bank balance at that moment was $15,607.76. After accounting for the refund, accountant fees, interim salary, web work, storage, and software, the school would close out at roughly $1,357 in reserve — "the roundest hundred we can give back."

The same letter coined the phrase that has stuck to the school: "To Radical Openness and Generosity." That language now titles SFPC's public finance repository on GitHub, where Profit & Loss statements, salary line items, and visiting-artist fees from 2013–2019 are committed alongside narrative reflections on cash-flow problems, K-1 phantom-income tax burdens, and budget-

2. Structure

Legal entity Every Profit & Loss statement in the school's repo prints the legal name as "SFPC, LLC." — a passthrough limited liability company, not a 501(c)(3). The 2019 narrative report explicitly explains the K-1 "phantom income" mechanic: "the LLC owners are responsible for paying the taxes on any profits SFPC has at the end of the year... SFPC covers the taxes only on that difference. All profits generated by SFPC stay within the school's bank account and are not disbursed to the LLC holders." [Gardner, 2019]

Tax-deductible giving SFPC's FAQ states: "We are also able to receive tax deductible donation through our fiscal sponsor." The fiscal sponsor is not named in public documents.

ProPublica No nonprofit entity for "School for Poetic Computation" or "SFPC" appears in ProPublica's nonprofit database — consistent with LLC structure plus fiscal-sponsorship for tax-deductible giving.

Public-facing language (2026) The current site (sfpc.study/about) describes a Co-Director model and lists a “Board of Directors.” The relationship between this nonprofit-style language and the LLC’s underlying corporate structure is not explained on the site. Whether the LLC was ever converted to a 501(c)(3) is not publicly disclosed.

ing Committee — Pitaru, Burtch, Benedetto, Gardner, Choi, Brain, Lieberman — to advise rotating session Organizers.

In May 2015 Casey Gollan departed, and Lauren Gardner joined Choi as co-administrator. In June–July 2015 the school hit a short-term cash-flow problem; Choi loaned $2,000 from his personal account to keep the balance positive, repaid on July 27 once summer deposits cleared. (\) Spring 2015 had eighteen students from eleven countries; nine paid full $5,000 tuition and nine received scholarships of varying levels. Summer 2015 introduced a part-time evening format at Babycastles Gallery (137 W 14th).

The repo skips 2016 and 2017 entirely. The 2019 report references those years only as: “In 2017, SFPC had an increase of $47,959 and in 2018, $43,946, which became a reserved balance after tax.”

Tega Brain, Taylor Levy, Che-Wei Wang,
Galen Macdonald, Celine Wong Katzman.

- The school is in residence at the National Academy of Design (519 West 26th Street) for Summer 2026's "Future Schools" programme, June 9 through August 22, 2026.

4. People

Tenure	Role
2013–	Co-founder, LLC partner, teacher
2013–	Co-founder, teacher, admin
2013–	Co-founder, teacher
2013–	Co-founder, teacher
2013–2015	Founding administrator
2015–	Administrator, Partner
2014–	Steering Committee
2020–	Steward (per Wikipedia)
2024– (approx)	Co-Director
2024– (approx)	Board of Directors

*Lieberman publicly stepped down in 2020 per Wikipedia.

Recurring teachers across multiple sessions include Allison Parrish (2015–present), Cori Kresge (Spring + Fall 2019, “Code Movement”), Melanie Hoff (Code Societies), Tega Brain (long-standing teacher and current Board member). The school works with a large rotating roster of guest artists; the 2019 narrative records 58 paid teaching staff in that year alone.

References

Taeyoon Choi. Sfpc spring 2018 report. <https://github.com/SFPC/finance-and-administration/tree/master/2018>, 2018. Written June 2018.

Taeyoon Choi and Lauren Gardner. Sfpc administration and finance report 2015. <https://github.com/SFPC/finance-and-administration/tree/master/2015>, 2016. Written Spring 2016 covering the 2015 calendar year.

School for Poetic Computation. finance-and-administration: “to radical openness and generosity.” public data and reflections on finance and administration from the school for poetic computation. <https://github.com/SFPC/finance-and-administration>, 2014–2019. Accessed 2026-05-02.

Lauren Gardner. 2019 sfpc final report. <https://github.com/SFPC/finance-and-administration/tree/master/2019>, 2019. Written July 2019.

Casey Gollan. A report on money: Sfpc first-semester finance letter. <https://github.com/SFPC/finance-and-administration/tree/master/2019>

com/SFPC/finance-and-administration/tree/master/01, 2014. Letter to the Fall 2013 student cohort, January 2014.

Zach Lieberman. Help the school for poetic computation. <https://www.gofundme.com/f/help-the-school-for-poetic-computation>, 2020. Spring 2020 community fundraiser launched after COVID-19 cancelled in-person programming.

Wikipedia contributors. School for poetic computation. https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/School_for_Poetic_Computation, 2026. Accessed 2026-05-02.