The short version

Resilient Minds needs a real web app. Right now it is one small page. The new one is a proper web app, written as code: a homepage that opens onto four areas — Rebecca's psychiatry practice, her mentoring and arts work, a place to take her classes, and a small shop. Jeffrey writes the code, builds every page, moves everything off Wix, and puts it live. Six weeks, start to finish. The price is $8,900: a $7,500 web-app build paid in three even $2,500 parts, plus a $1,400 logo and style guide billed when they are done.

The Look & Feel

How it should feel

Calm, classical, a little alchemical. Warm off-white paper and deep ink, four quiet section colors, a touch of gold. A classic serif for headings and a plain typeface for reading — nothing rounded or cute. Old anatomical and star-chart engravings (the Robert Fludd drawing) carry the artwork; no stock photos of candles, crystals, or yoga. The writing stays calm and precise — it never sounds like it is selling.

What you'll have at the end

A homepage and four pillar areas, in code	The classes pillar with sign-ups & levels
Everything working on phones	Off Wix, on its own web address
The shop page wired to her dispensary	The code itself, handed over with notes

What we know

✓	Four areas: the practice, mentoring & arts, classes, and a shop
✓	Care happens over video — patients in California, Washington & Arizona
✓	The practice runs under Rebecca Bonneville, NP
✓	The look leans on the Fludd drawing; Aman.com is the feeling she wants
✓	The opening line is set — “The body remembers. Every symptom has a story.”

To be determined

☐	The final name — Resilience Institute, EMUNA, or ShaLem
☐	Where the classes area is hosted (with Danielle & Chandler)
☐	Real photos for the site — coming later
☐	A short film of the office — coming later
☐	Where movement, retreats & legacy work sit in the layout

There is no monthly retainer — you pay only for the hours you actually use. The website is yours either way.
